

Editor's Note

Dear Reader,

Time flies, and the journal in your hands is already the last one of Volume 36. One of the major achievements this year has been the assembly of a strong Editorial Board, and I am particularly grateful to its members for their excellent contributions and constant encouragement. The articles published in TJVM have never been of higher quality, and I am certain this improvement will continue in the coming years. In 2007, the Editorial team will be led by Dr. Roongroje Thanawongnuwech. Together they will continue to strive towards our goal; namely, to communicate cutting edge research in animal and veterinary sciences to the world.

There is good news if you are thinking of sending your manuscript to TJVM; as from Volume 37 there will no longer be a page charge on the accepted manuscript. However, we do ask that you have manuscripts checked for English - by a native English speaker - prior to submission.

As outgoing editor I would like to take this opportunity of wishing the new team every success in their task, and will look forward with much interest to each new copy of the journal.
